NOTES ON BRIGHTWELL, ETC.—In the notes recently contributed to this Journal (VI. p. 120) on the parish of Brightwell, a friend who knows the village intimately points out an error due to lapse of memory on the part of the writer. The Elizabethan house at Mackney, known as Small's House, is not of brick, but of good free-stone. It is worth adding also that it contains a fine and wide staircase of oak, and the joists of the floors are also of oak; but the house, which is of two stories, was left unfinished, the upper floor never having been laid upon the joists. It was formerly let in four tenements, but is now in two.—J.E.F.
