

MONUMENTS SCHEDULED IN 1933.

(The map references are to the six-inch survey).

Omitted from list published in the Journal for 1932, Vol. LIII, p. 100.

No. 4. Guardianship Class.

"Nine Ladies" Circle, Stanton Moor, Birchover.
Scheduled during 1933.

No. 58. Tumulus on Burton Moor, Bakewell. Ordnance Map, Sheet XXIII (Derbyshire) S.E. Section. This tumulus was excavated by Thomas Bateman in the year 1849, and described in Ten Years' Diggings, pp. 46-8. Human remains were found and also an elaborate necklace of jet beads. This was round the neck of a skeleton. An illustration appears in Bateman's work, also in the Sheffield Public Museum catalogue, p. 63. The Ordnance Map shows this tumulus at the intersection of three field-walls.

No. 59. Tumulus, Grindlow, Over Haddon. Ordnance Map reference as above. This tumulus lies to the south of No. 58. References have not been found in the Bateman writings. Map says, "Human remains and lancehead found."

No. 60. Mackworth Castle. Ordnance Sheet XLIX (Derbyshire) N.E. Section. A large late-Gothic gatehouse fronting the village street of Mackworth, which once formed part of the Derby-Ashbourne road, i.e. before the present high road was made. The gatehouse, now the entrance to a farmyard, was originally the entrance to a manor house of the de Mackworths. See the Society's Journals for 1889 and 1911.

No. 61. Carl Cark. Ordnance Sheet II (Derbyshire),

S.W. Section. A large promontory fortress on the Longshaw Moors. Probably British, but may be earlier. Has no written history but its significance can be realised by an examination of the work itself. Shows massive masonry of dry construction with indications of an involved entrance between high walls near the north-west corner. Now belongs to the Sheffield Corporation and lies within the catchment area of the latest water scheme. Literary references are numerous:—Archaeologia, Vol. VII, pp. 175-6-8. Journal of the British Archaeological Association, Vols. XVII, p. 3, XXX, pp. 62-3, 407. Camden's Britannica (Gough), Vol. II, p. 439. Beauties of England and Wales, p. 476. Bray's Tour, p. 243. Ten Years' Diggings (Bateman), p. 253. Earthwork of England (Allcroft), p. 65. Glover's History of Derbyshire, Vol. I, p. 286. Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's Journal, Vol. XXV (1903).

The Fishing House, Beresford Dale. Notwithstanding that this charming little renaissance building stands on the Staffordshire side of the Dove, it lies so near to the Derbyshire borders that its fate could not be overlooked by Derbyshire people. The County Correspondent, having received early information of a sale of the property, raised the question of its preservation in correspondence with the Chief Inspectorate of Ancient Monuments and was asked to send in a scheduling form. The building, which is in good condition, bears the intertwined initials of Charles Cotton and Izaak Walton, over the door, with the date 1674.

Application for the scheduling of an alleged pre-Norman cross-shaft at Burbage, Buxton is in abeyance awaiting further investigation. See the Society's Journal for 1932, Plate XI.

Several complaints have reached the writer during the past year concerning damage and interference by an undesirable section of the rambling community, especially concerning "Brown Low" tumulus near Ludworth, and it seems necessary to repeat the request made formerly, that members of the Society will be good enough to report to the undersigned any cases of damage to scheduled monuments which come under their personal notice. Concerning tumuli especially, even if not scheduled, information will always be received with thanks. Also seeing that the Society has a Natural History side to its activities, it should be reported that considerable mischief has been done to the surroundings of Eldon Hole. This matter not coming within the province of the Ancient Monuments Board, your Correspondent reported it to the County Police Headquarters. The official report states that the accounts of damage are true. The protecting wall has been destroyed all but the foundations and the surroundings disfigured.

A letter from the Chief Inspectorate informs me that old toll houses, if of special interest and not inhabited, also not in the way of pending road-widenings, would be considered favourably with a view to scheduling. Their use therefore as wayside shelters or refreshment houses would not be regarded as disqualifications.

T. L. TUDOR,

County Correspondent,

Ancient Monuments Board.
