

---

Acknowledgements

Our main vote of thanks is rightfully reserved for our employers, the Sussex Archaeological Society, the organisation which provided us with the time and some of the funds to undertake the excavations. Thanks are also due to the owners of the land, the Chichester Diocesan Board. Generous grant aid for the excavation was also given by the British Academy, the Roman Research Trust, the Royal Archaeological Institute and West Sussex County Council. The excavations we co-directed at Fishbourne, were helped by incredibly hard-working supervisors, such as David Maynard, Richard Jones, Carol Edwards, James Kenny (then of Southern Archaeology in 1995), Rupert Featherby, Naomi Sykes, Nobs (Robert Symmons), and Robbie Browse, and by members of the Society and trainees. We would also like to thank all the staff of Fishbourne Roman Palace for their patience, good humour and support when all the diggers descended on their property for six weeks each summer. In addition, members of the West Sussex Metal Detecting Society, from the 1997 season onwards, provided daily help in retrieving metal artefacts. The co-directors would also like to thank Sally White and Sarah Martin for undertaking all the preliminary drafting for the line drawings. Bull House (Lewes) volunteers Alistair Matson and Wendy Muriel did much of the final preparation of the on-line database. Ivy, as ever, provided an assortment of quiches, salads and laughter to keep us all fed and in good humour, while Helen Bolton filmed some of the memorable moments. James Kenny, Chichester District Council archaeologist, provided helpful advice. Visits, and ensuing discussions, during the excavation by Alec Down, John Magilton, John Mills, David Rudling, David and Joanna Bird, Mark Hassall, Martin Millett and Ernest Black were appreciated.

In writing the report the co-directors are indebted to all the specialists who have generously given their time to the project, in particular Lucy Sibun and Naomi Sykes for the analysis and commentary on the animal bones. We would also like to thank Barry Cunliffe for commenting on a previous draft of the report.

Geoff Dannell would like to thank Philip Kenrick for allowing references to his new edition of the Oxé-Comfort Catalogue of Arretine stamps (A. Oxé, H. Comfort and P. Kenrick, Corpus Vasorum Arretinorum Second Ed., pub. forth.). He also, generously, looked at the unstamped-ware, and contributed comments, which are incorporated in the dating lists.

David Rudling wishes to thank Richard Aaby of the British Museum's Department of Coins and Medals for his help in identifying, and commenting upon, some of the Fishbourne coins. Philip de Jersey of the Institute of Archaeology, University of Oxford, identified the Tasciovanus coin from the 1985-1986 excavations and supplied details of various Carthaginian coin finds from Britain as recorded on the Celtic Coin Index at Oxford. Thanks are also owed to Richard Reece, who commented on a draft of the coin report and provided the coin graphs.

---

