

NOTES

The 'Small Finds' category in the CTRL Section 1 archive includes all metalwork (coins, metal-working residues and metallurgical studies are reported in sub-sections within small finds reports, where relevant). Separate reports on additional functional sub-categories have been written for the large Anglo-Saxon metalwork assemblage from Saltwood Tunnel - listed separately below).

The 'Small Finds' reports and datasets also include worked bone, window and vessel glass, fired clay objects (eg. loomweights) and worked stone objects (except prehistoric worked and burnt flint, which are grouped in the 'Lithics' category). Structural fired clay and ceramic building material are included, with pottery, in the 'Ceramics' specialist category.

Unlike the other main specialist categories, there is no schemewide report, as the diversity of material, and relatively small assemblage sizes (other than the cemetery assemblages) would make any schemewide comparison meaningless. The digital archive contains extensive description and discussion of the individual small finds assemblages, arranged as follows:

Integrated site reports (ISRs) include summary description and discussion of small finds assemblages in their site context, focussing on the most significant material.

Specialist reports include descriptions and discussion of small finds assemblages, grouped by Principal Site.

Grave catalogues (appended to the three major cemetery ISRs) include catalogue descriptions of grave-related artefacts (derived from the specialist datasets).

Specialist datasets are database files listing all small finds, with catalogue details. They can be found accompanying the relevant specialist reports.

Illustrations of the major cemetery finds assemblages (Pepper Hill, Saltwood Tunnel and Cuxton) are included in the grave catalogue figures (appended to the relevant ISRs).

Selected small finds from non-grave contexts are normally illustrated in the relevant ISR, alongside associated context plans or sections. A very small number of additional illustrations, not selected for the ISRs, may be found in the digital archive, accompanying the specialist report.

Available small finds specialist reports are listed below. They can be downloaded from the Project Archives section of the Archaeology Data Service website:
