

Acknowledgements

I wish to thank many people and agencies for their help and support during the time that it has taken to complete this study.

I would like to thank two organisations, the E.S.R.C. and English Heritage for their financial and supervisory support in this study, without which it would never have happened. I would also like to thank the staff of the School of Independent Studies at Lancaster University who negotiated the E.S.R.C. Case Studentship in the first place.

There are four people to whom I owe my biggest debt of thanks; these are my supervisors at Lancaster University and English Heritage. At the university Susan Condor has been there throughout and has been a source of much inspiration, as has Claudia Castañeda who has seen me through the last four years. Mike Michael supervised my first year introducing me to Science Studies before leaving Lancaster for London. I would also like to thank my supervisor at English Heritage Adrian Olivier for his support and encouragement whilst I came to terms with the interdisciplinary work that this study required. I would also like to thank the staff and post-graduate students of both the Centre for Science Studies and Psychology for their helpful support and advice at particular moments of need, especially Mike Collins, John Dixon and Vickie Singleton.

I was supported throughout the study by the staff at the Centre for Science Studies especially Leslie Waite who coped with being moved from one university department to another admirably.

I would also like to thank my wife Liz Allen for her support throughout and especially as she married me after my first year of study knowing full well what lay ahead.

Finally but not least I would like to thank all of the families who participated in this study. They all made me very welcome in their homes and put everything into the task that they were set. I hope that their varied characters come through in the study even if their names have been changed for obvious reasons. I would like to thank in particular Jim Pithouse and Will Scott at Worcester City Council for their assistance and time during the planning stage of the study.