

AUTUMN, 1969
VOL. 1 No. 4
3s.

the London Archaeologist

STANE STREET

TIN-GLAZED KILN DIG

CROSSNESS BEAM ENGINES

MOVING A ROMAN KILN

MOSAIC BOOKS
DIARY
COMMENTARY

University of London Department of Extra-Mural Studies

Courses in Archaeology & Local Studies 1969-70

Last year nearly one hundred courses in these and related studies were offered by the Department and were held in all parts of the London Region. This year's programme will be similar and will include part time evening lecture courses, residential and non-residential week-ends, and residential one-week courses.

A very wide range of subjects, from World Prehistory to Local Studies in the London region, is available through the Tutorial and Extension sections.

Among these courses are:

1. Those which lead through annual examinations to Extension Diplomas in Archaeology and History (Local History) or to a sessional certificate in Field Archaeology and the Archaeology of South Eastern England.
2. Those which, without examination, study and practise the techniques of excavation, field-surveying and environmental archaeology under professional archaeologists.
3. Those which offer accounts of the present state of research in particular fields. Of especial interest this year will be the course on Recent Archaeological Excavation and Research in Britain to which several leading archaeologists will contribute.

There are no entrance requirements, other than a willingness to study seriously under direction.

Send details to the Director, W. Burmeister, M.A., Department of Extra-Mural Studies, (L.A.), University of London, 7 Ridgmount Street, W.C.1.