The Medieval Horse and its Equipment

Number 5 in the series: Medieval Finds from Excavations in London. Edited by John Clark

Horses played a vital role in medieval life, whether as richly caparisoned knights' chargers or humble beasts of burden. Archaeological sites in the City of London have uncovered an astonishing and valuable array of equestrian equipment, from bridle buckles, harness pendants, stirrups and spurs to horseshoes, grooming accessories and skeletal remains, providing a fascinating picture of life in the Middle Ages.

The book presents over 400 items in the form of text, engravings, illustrations, photographs, diagrams, maps, paintings and tables in a clear and informative manner and is essential reading for scholars of medieval and equestrian history, those investigating London and its medieval infrastructure, and horse enthusiasts everywhere.

Published by HMSO Books for the Museum of London.
