

While on the road beneath Donnington Hill, the poet may have viewed many a pilgrim band wending its way from the west country shires to Canterbury. And so, using Godwin's words, "We may indulge our veneration for Donnington Castle, and walk amongst its ruins, tracing the footsteps of the poet, without danger of subjecting ourselves to the empire of a delusion."

ERRATUM.—At p. 52, line 3, read 1161 instead 1611; p. 57, line 11 from the bottom misplaced, it should be inserted between "year" and "Chaucer" in the following line; p. 58, read 1247 instead of 1227.
