CREMORNE AND THE LATER LONDON

PLEASURE-GARDENS. By WARWICK WROTH, Assistant-Keeper of the Coins and Medals in the British Museum; Author of "The London Pleasure-Gardens of the Eighteenth Century," &c.

The gardens described in the present volume have naturally claimed a lighter and less detailed treatment than their predecessors of the eighteenth century, yet care has been taken throughout to indicate the sources of information. Some record of the majority of these gardens is attempted in the present work, and about eighteen which seem the most interesting and typical have been described in detail. The volume is illustrated by a number of contemporary views, plans, scenes, and facsimiles which illustrate the text and add greatly to its interest and literary value.
