RELATIVE TO CANONS ASHBY, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

Communicated by JOSEPH BAIN, F.S.A. Scot.

The following original charters may interest Northamptonshire antiquaries, as they relate to the Church of the "Blessed Mary of Ashby," the well known Priory of Black Canons of the Augustinian Order, founded in the reign of Henry II, probably by Stephen de Leya, then lord of the manor. He was at all events its earliest benefactor, as his very interesting charter testifies, of which, with its details, an abstract is given by the laborious Baker (Hist. of Northamptonshire, vol. ii, p. 18). It occurs on the first folio of the MS. cartulary of the Priory, a document often referred to by Baker, and his predecessor Bridges, as being in the possession of the family of Orlebar of Hinwick, Co. Bedford. Baker has also given an abstract (loc. cit.) of the third and most curious of the charters now printed, shewing that it is contained in the MS. cartulary, and probably so are the other two. But as the cartulary has never been printed, so far as the writer understands, the full text of these documents may perhaps be acceptable. The charters are Nos. 5882-3-4 of the Additional Charters, British Museum, and were purchased from a London bookseller in May 1841.

Size 6in. by 2½in., clearly written with contractions.

dexxxiiij seiliones cum iij forr et alijs."

1 It may be, that, as is often the case, the cartulary does not give the list of the attesting witnesses, always one of the most valuable details in an early charter as tending to fix its date.
[Abstract.]

Henry the Knight son of Roger of Morton for the safety of his own and his wife's and his heirs' souls, and those of his father and mother and of all his ancestors, gives to God and the Canons of the Church of S. Mary of Essebi all the domain which was given in marriage with his mother, viz., 10 ridges of land on Exlet; and 2 ridges upon further (or over) Bereforlang; and 3 ridges upon the other Bereforlang; and 6 ridges and 3 furrows upon Hegtrelang; and 2 ridges upon Hob'ge; and all the land in Brade which he bought from Henry "le L'ab," with the whole meadow which he bought from said Henry. To be held by the Canons in pure and perpetual alms.

"Sir Simon de Pinkeni," one of the witnesses to this deed, was probably Sir Simon of Moreton Pinkney and Sulgrave, who flourished at the end of John's reign and the beginning of that of Henry. He was related to the Barons of Wedon, who were Lords paramount of Moreton.

Add. Charters, (5883).

William, son of Hamon, gives to God and the blessed Mary of Esseby and the Canons serving God there, for the safety of his own and his father's and mother's souls, and those of his ancestors and successors, one half acre of land with the pertinents in the fields of Wappenham, that namely, which lies in Kinwellmull next to the land of Benedict the son of Bartholomei ex parte orientali. In pure and perpetual alms, &c. Appends his seal.

Of the witnesses, Sir Roger de Lyons and Robert de Plumpton are members of early and important County families.

Add. Charters, (5584).

The word "seilio" occurring above, is doubtless the same as the French "sillon." It is explained by Ducange to mean a piece of land of uncertain extent: "Forera," on the same authority, is a piece of land at right angles to the ridge, no doubt to enable a plough to be turned. "Ridge and furrow" is a well known expression in our own day.

Hugh Gulafre for his own and his wife's safety and that of his heirs, and for the souls of his father and mother and of all his ancestors gives to the Church of S. Mary of Essebi and the Canons there serving God three virgates and a half of land in Ettenestona with messuages &c. and with the men who hold the said land in vilenage viz: Estmund, Richard son of Randulf, Randulf brother of Estmundii, Seledus, Wibertus, and Orsewinus. Also gives one virgate in said vill which Galfridus de Northona shall hold of the Canons, he and his heirs paying them 16d annually. Also he confirms 2 virgates of land in the same vill which his father gave the Canons with a messuage and a grove. The Canons to hold the said six virgates and a half free of all secular service to the granter and his heirs, except as much foreign service as pertains to 6½ virgates of a knight's fee, containing in itself 35\frac{1}{2} virgates. This is a curious, and, as testified by the number and character of the witnesses, an important deed, and is pointed out as such by Mr. Baker, especially in respect of its conveyance of the six villeins, and its specifying the extent of a knight's fee. The granter was doubtless Hugo Gulafre, Lord of the Manor of Blakesley in Norton Hundred circ. 1200. Bridges' Northamptonshire, vol. ii, pp. 227, 231-2; and Baker, vol. ii, p. 22. Walkelin, Abbot of St. James, is considered by Bridges (vol. ii, p. 497) to be the same person as Walkelin, father of William de Duston, who in 7th of John (1205) obtained a confirmation of the lands which his father held in Duston (Newbottle Hundred) "at the time he put on the habit of a religious. Walkelin was elected abbot of St. James's Monastery in 26th Henry II, and died in the 7th year of this (John’s) reign.”

Henry de Pincheni is either the Baron of Wedon of that christian name, who died circa 1209, ancestor of the competitor for the Scottish crown, or his relative, Henry de Pinkeni of Morton Pinkeni and Sulgrave, temp. Henry II.1 Some of the other witnesses belong to well known Northamptonshire houses. Ralph Basset could trace a high judicial lineage. He was probably the second son of Richard Basset, and Maud Ridel, heiress of Geoffrey Ridel Chief Justice of England, “an eminent and learned person,” as Dugdale calls him; while his paternal grandfather, Ralph Basset, had preceded Geoffrey Ridel in the high office of Chief Justice. And what is curious, from Maud being an heiress, her eldest son Geoffrey took her surname and arms for his life, as Dugdale points out in his Baronage.

These observations may be permitted, although coming from a stranger to the county. Canons Ashby, the historic seat of the Drydens, is not less linked with the name of the great poet, than with the archaeological researches of its present owner in Scotland’s “Ultima Thule.” A Scotsman may, therefore, be presumed to take an interest in a county which, as a member of the Honour of Huntingdon, was once closely identified with the Scottish kings and princes, as many charters yet testify.

1 It is singular that Dugdale, Bridges, and Baker were unable to trace the career of Sir Henry de Pinkeni, brother and heir of Sir Robert, the competitor for the Scottish crown, except that in 1301 he sold his barony to Edward I, and in 1302 was summoned to serve in the Scottish war. Only a few days ago the writer observed the following original entry concerning him, which seems to be unknown:—

“Domino Henrico de Pynkenye, militi, commorant ad vadia Regis in municione ville Berewici super Twedam, capiente per diem iis pro vadiis suis, et Mauricii de Dromsagard, scutiferi sui, capientis per diem xii per diem iij libras. Probatum.”

This was in A.D. 1312 (5th Edward II). In the Horse Roll, Sir Henry’s horse, a “clear bay,” is valued at 20 marks; and that of his “Squire,” a “black,” at 100 shillings.

This is taken from a Muster Roll of the Garrison of Berwick on Tweed, serving under the orders of Sir Ralph of Monthermer, Lieutenant of the King in Scotland, among the Cotton MSS. in the British Museum. Part of it was printed many years ago in the appendix to the Chronicon de Lanercost out of the Scotch Club Books, and there it has lain entombed. Sir Henry, who was now in his forty-sixth year, was thus serving as a simple Knight at 2s. per diem. His Esquire was evidently a Scotsman, probably a cadet of the Morays of Bothwell and Drumsargard in Clydesdale. Did the Knight fall a couple of years later at Bannockburn like many of his comrades! He was fairly mounted, but not extravagantly. Some of the English knights on the border at that time had chargers worth from £30 to £50.
