I have been able thus far to collect are of course quite insufficient to arrive at anything like definite conclusions. Neither have I so far been able to obtain any particulars on this point concerning French torcs. Such information would be of value, as the method employed in their construction may possibly throw some light on the question of their origin. Sir John Evans has kindly sent me a sketch of a torc from Carcassonne in his own collection, but this example would appear, by its star-shaped section (the angles of the cross are filled in) to be one of the moulded examples.
