

7th September 1976

Professor Peter Glob,
National Museum,
COPENHAGEN.

Dear Professor Glob,

During my excavations at Aksum in 1974 two vessels came to light in a tomb, on which in relief are represented a cross and (on the opposite side of the pot) a disc and crescent, reversed.

I remember seeing somewhere a reference to a combination of Christian and pagan symbols on, I think, Viking objects. If you are acquainted with this, I would be most grateful if you could tell me of such parallels. They would be of particular interest if the symbols were reversed.

Yours sincerely,
