

Lead mining in the Peak District, edited by Trevor D. Ford and J. H. Rieuwerts and compiled by members of the Peak District Mines Historical Society. The special interest and value of this book is that after introductory sections on the geology and history of lead mining, which inevitably overlap sections of Miss Kirkham's book, twelve detailed itineraries are provided for walks in the lead mining districts. These do admirably illustrate the work done by the very active members of this Society to explore, interpret and on occasion preserve the visual evidence of lead mining. Interested people now have an excellent guide with which to explore the archaeology of lead mining. It is well illustrated with informative plates, but unfortunately the maps and plans are reproduced on a very inconveniently small scale.
