

FINALISING BULL RING HENGE TALK

July 29, 2011 mlawrence Day of Archaeology, Day of Archaeology 2011 Henge, Megalithic monuments, Nottingham, organisational management, The Bull Ring, UK, visitor services

Having checked my emails and replied to those that can't wait until Monday, I'm finalising my notes for a talk I giving tomorrow about the Bull Ring henge, near Buxton. I'm more used to talking to children about archaeology (and making it interactive) so giving a straight talk to adults will be a new experience. If anyone reading this is coming to the Open Day tomorrow, be nice!

I'm off to Nottingham later to attend a briefing session on the new Accreditation standard for museums. Accreditation is a scheme that sets minimum standards for museums to achieve in relation to caring for collections, organisational management, visitor services etc. It'll be interesting to discuss how the changes might affect us.