

NEW ROMAN DISCOVERIES IN THE OFFING

July 29, 2011 GGAT Day of Archaeology, Day of Archaeology 2011 Anthropology, Archaeology, Cadw, Martin Tuck, Museology, Project Officer, Roman Fort, Science, Wales

My name is Martin Tuck, a Project Officer with GGAT. My role alternates between fieldwork and office based report writing. At the moment I am engaged on the preparation of an archaeological excavation design, including Scheduled Monument Consent from Cadw, for additional work relating to the site of a Roman fort in Neath, where the Trust carried out an archaeological excavation during 2010, which continued through to the early part of 2011. The Roman remains discovered related to a 1st century Roman fort, which included defensive ditches and associated rampart, cooking areas and an internal circuit road. The forthcoming works are likely to reveal details of part of the barracks.