July 29, 2011 GGAT Commercial Archaeology, Day of Archaeology, Day of Archaeology 2011, Maritime Archaeology Briefs, Caerleon, Cowbridge, Excavation, Geography of the United Kingdom, Glamorgan, Jon Burton, Merthyr Tydfil, UK, Underwear, Wales, watching brief

My name is Jon Burton, I work in the contracts department of GGAT. I normally spend a fair amount of time out in the field, dealing directly with clients, carrying out watching briefs, evaluations, and on occasions full scale excavations.

Most of this week I've been working on post excavation reports, related to watching briefs carried out in the Glamorgan and Gwent area. These include watching briefs carried out in the Caerleon area, related to the line of a former roman road, and another watching brief in the Port Talbot area along the line of a new road scheme which, has uncovered a number of features related to former industrial activity.

Today I had hoped to continue with the writing up of a small watching brief, carried out this week in Cowbridge. However, another fieldwork project has come up in Merthyr which, requires cover next week, and so now I'll have to produce a risk assessment, and gather some background information in preparation for this new work.
