

TYPICAL DAY IN OUR MUSEUM

July 29, 2011 Pomezana Day of Archaeology, Day of Archaeology 2011 Early Medieval, education, Elbląg, food, museum, Olaf I, reconstruction, Truso, Vikings

Today is Day of Archaeology so let's sail through this day on our ship with Olaf Sculptures from Elblag's Biennial looks like huge dragons, and are located all around Elblag. You can walk around city and watch different monument. On my way to work I see just few of them. Art installations gives my home town artistic look.

Church path with beautiful arcs makes everyone feel really medieval. I think It is the most charming place.

At the Museum I usually document artefacts. Measuring, taking pictures, preparations for exhibitions... It takes a lot of time, but work with such beautiful things makes you feel special.

but sometimes.... Olaf is messing with our work... (this picture almost got published in our book)

Visitors can have guided tours with Museum staff. Olaf and archaeologists talk about different sites and exhibitions in Museum. You can see exhibitions about History of the Goths, The Amber -Truso-Emporium and Elbląg – a recovered testimony of the past.

Museum lessons held in reconstruction of long house on Museum yard are very interesting.

Well... not that interesting for Olaf, who has huge problems with drawing...

Children could play medieval games, learn history and get little bit dirty while making clay pottery. When the weather is nice everyone can see how medieval women made food for their families (and how it tasted).
