The Society for American Archaeology (SAA) is participating in the Day of Archaeology 2011 festival at Garfield Park in Washington, DC. Today I'm preparing materials to distribute to kids, families, teachers, and anyone else who drops by. We'll also have some hands-on archaeology activities at the booth. The festival is sponsored by Archaeology in the Community--a network of archaeologists, anthropologists, teachers, and volunteers working together to make archaeology accessible to youth, schools, and community organizations through creative programs and community projects. Look for additional posts about the festival from organizer Alexandra Jones.
