Week 9 of our project in Kent continues apace, with many features revealed, and many more yet to dig. We have some interesting alignments of postholes and ditches, revealing a potential settlement with a substantial structure at its heart.

Not pictured: fantastic weather

The site comprises several kilometres of stripping for a new road and a housing development, which creates logistical issues that don't normally occur on the sites we run in central London. Every day is a challenge, but one that is made easier by an amazing team, and up until today, fantastic weather!
