

BEHIND THE SCENES AT THE NATURAL HISTORY MUSEUM LONDON

July 11, 2014 Brenna Hassett Day of Archaeology 2014, Museum Archaeology, Osteology, Science Archaeology, behind the scenes, Bioarchaeology, London, museum life, Museums, Natural History Museum, osteology, physical anthropology

Hi! Something a bit different from me this year – in previous years it's been all about me, me, me: my posts ondental anthropology being a Real Thing and dead people in augmented reality were focused on my research. But for a change, I've corralled my wonderful colleagues here at the Natural History Museum London into a short video that gives a little look-see behind the scenes at all the things our resident researchers get up to in the name of archaeology...

Thanks for watching! You can also find me on twitter as @brennawalks or as part of the awesome collective hive mind that is Team @TrowelBlazers.