

PLANNING A 1:1 RECONSTRUCTION OF AN EARLY NEOLITHIC LONG HOUSE

July 11, 2014 Alexander Gramsch Experimental Archaeology, Museum Archaeology, Neolithic, Public Archaeology experimental archaeology, Linear Pottery culture, Stone Age Europe

Herxheim Museum director Alexander Gramsch (left), architect Kurt Garrecht (centre) and experimental archaeologist Markus Loges (right) with a model of a typical long house of the Early Neolithic Linearbandkeramik culture (LBK)

Planning the house model while sitting in the Museum Herxheim archaeological garden.

The LBK long house will be part of an exhibition at a large-scale gardening show.