

DIGGING DIARIES – THE HOUSE AS OLD AS STONEHENGE

July 24, 2015 Denis Minihan Archaeological Prospection, Commercial Archaeology, Community Archaeology, Digital Archaeology, Excavation, Explore Posts, Historical Archaeology, Landscape Archaeology, Museum Archaeology, Neolithic, Public Archaeology ancient, Archaeologists, Archaeology, Architecture, Avebury, BC, British, Bronze Age, Burial, Discovery, druids, English, Henge, Heritage, house, Marden Henge, monument, mystery, Neolithic, Prehistoric, ritual, Stonehenge

Following on from the wonders of Star Carr, here's our next video, 'The House As Old As Stonehenge'

<https://youtu.be/XY2wvHt0WIM>

A digging team has uncovered the remains of a building which is over 4000 years old. It's been found on the vast Neolithic landscape of Marden Henge situated within the Vale of Pewsey, Wiltshire.

The University of Reading Archaeology Department have been carrying out the excavations in collaboration with Historic England, the Arts & Humanities Research Council and the Wiltshire Museum.

Subscribe to our channel and follow us on Twitter (@DiggingDiaries) to keep up to date with all the new exciting digs and dives happening all over Britain this summer.

Happy Digging from all the team!