Foreword

In his first year as President, my predecessor, Barry Cunliffe, was particularly pleased to welcome the first volume of this Dictionary. It gives me equal pleasure, only four years later and in my own first year, to welcome volume two. The relatively short time that it has taken to produce this volume is the result of the unstinted effort put into the checking and editing of the Papworth cards by Thomas Woodcock and Janet Grant. The Society and all scholars who make use of this volume owe them a great debt of gratitude for their dedication and enthusiasm. The speed of production has also been aided by the computerisation of the project, and for this our thanks are due to Ian Graham, as well as for his continuing explorations into the possibilities of the electronic control and exchange of data.

The Croft Lyons Committee of the Society of Antiquaries has overseen the project from its outset, and it is a matter of great regret that the longest serving member of this committee, Sir Anthony Wagner, did not live to see the appearance of this volume. With the appearance of this volume our thoughts have already turned to the production of volumes three and four and we hope to see them issued within a comparable timescale. Indeed, the Croft Lyons committee has been encouraged by this progress to consider what other volumes might be produced, in addition to the Ordinary, to make up the pre-1530 Dictionary of British Arms. It is good to see the Society, for so long involved in the study of heraldry, continuing to play an active part.

History of the Project since 1992

Volume I of the Dictionary of British Arms – Medieval Ordinary was published in 1992. It contains a full account of the earlier history of the project written by Hubert Chesshyre, Chester Herald, now Norroy and Ulster King of Arms. For Volume I Hubert Chesshyre and I were the two editors and there were three assistant editors, Janet Grant, Alan Sykes and William Hunt. The editors worked out the structure of the Ordinary and the bulk of the work, reducing approximately 30,000 cards into a uniform abbreviated state on computers in the College of Arms and the Institute of Archaeology, was done by Janet Grant and Alan Sykes. Ian Graham, then a lecturer in the Institute, was responsible for supervising the computer input of the text from the cards, for computer programs to manipulate, sort and index the data, and for computer typesetting of camera-ready copy. William Hunt, now Portcullis Pursuivant, concentrated on the sources, abbreviations and list of compilers of the original cards. Before Volume I was published Alan Sykes had moved abroad as his wife took up a Foreign Office posting overseas.

Hubert Chesshyre and I decided that it was unnecessary for us both to work out the structure of the Ordinary in succeeding volumes having agreed the pattern for Volume I. We were both increasingly busy at the College of Arms and it was becoming more difficult to find occasions when we were free at the same time to discuss the structure. As he had taken on the additional post of Registrar of the College of Arms it was decided that he should resign as an Editor, although he kindly agreed to continue as a consultant and to retain an interest in the work as a member of the Croft Lyons Committee. He also worked on and agreed the structure for the first part-box of the thirty-one boxes of cards edited in this volume covering pages one to twelve of the Ordinary.

Although Hubert Chesshyre resigned as an Editor for subsequent volumes at the Croft Lyons Committee Meeting on 21 March 1991 work did not commence on editing Volume II until the autumn of 1992. One reason for this was final correction work on Volume I, the other was lack of a computer. The original computer purchased by the Society of Antiquaries to enable work to be done at the College of Arms had developed an incurable fault. The problem was resolved by the loan of the Society of Antiquaries' old library cataloguing computer which came to the College of Arms in July 1992. Ian Graham recommended an expert in England on computers, Stephen Mercer of DTP Services, who converted the computer to enable the editing work to be done and who has been a continuing source of assistance throughout the work on Volume II.

Half of the Ordinary is now completed with the publication of Volume II which extends to the end of chevrons. Volumes I and II are equivalent to pages 1–554 in J. W. Papworth's Ordinary of British Armorial (1874) on which the structure is based and which has a total of 1125 pages.

William Hunt kindly offered to continue working on Volume II but as his contribution to Volume I in the form of the source lists, terminology and lists of compilers was completed and editing the main text for Volume I on two separate computers had caused slight problems of reconciliation of style, it was decided that there was nothing useful that he could do for Volume II. In the course of the work on Volume II the terminology list has been added to considerably. Further additions will probably be made in Volumes III and IV as it is inevitable with a dictionary arranged by design that new terms of blazon, abbreviations and charges occur grouped together in different parts of the projected four volumes. Use of Volume I and enquiries from users has led to a realization that a fuller description of the sources including their present location was needed, particularly as forty-six years have passed since the publication of Sir Anthony Wagner's Catalogue of English Medieval Rolls of Arms published as Aspilogia I by the Society of Antiquaries in 1950. Consequently the source list is fuller in Volume II and includes a few sources for which there were no entries in Volume I and which were only discovered during work on Volume II. Hardly any additions, with the exception of dates of death of compilers who have died since the publication of Volume I, have been made to the list of compilers.

In 1985 Ian Graham, who had been associated with the project since 1979, left the Institute of Archaeology and took up a post at the University of Waikato, Hamilton, New Zealand, where he is now Dean of the School of Computing and Mathematical Sciences and a professor of computer science. As he was able to do the technical editing for the publication of Volume I in New Zealand and kindly agreed to continue, there could be no one better to do this side of the work. Computer disks containing the edited material were sent by express mail to New Zealand from which Ian Graham produced the proofs and camera-ready copy, which were sent back to England.

The experience gained in the thirteen years it took to produce Volume I in part made it possible to produce Volume II in three years. The other contributing factor was sustained hard work by Janet Grant who single-handedly edited the material on the computer whilst continuing her other work at the College of Arms. Tremendous assistance was given in the last stages by Mrs. Janet Clayton, Managing Editor of the Society of Antiquaries. Finally the work on this volume has only been possible through the generous support given to the project by the J. Paul Getty Jr Charitable Trust and the Francis Coales Trust.

The one regret is that Sir Anthony Wagner, who was appointed General Editor of the Dictionary of British Arms in 1940 and whose scholarly contribution to both heraldry and genealogy is unsurpassed, should not have lived to see the publication of this volume. He retained an active interest in the work to the end of his life and I spent over an hour discussing the progress of the Dictionary of British Arms and other heraldic matters with him on the day before his death on 5 May 1995.

Structure of the Ordinary

In a codicil to his will dated 5 January 1926 and proved in the same year Lieutenant-Colonel G. B. Croft Lyons wrote: 'I wish that a new edition of Papworth's Ordinary should be prepared. And that in order that such edition can be generally useful I desire that the blazon of the Arms in such new edition shall follow the style of blazon in the present edition and that the new forms affected in recent years by certain writers be not adopted but that the blazon be full and exact and such that any person can as far as may be understand it.'

Papworth's *Ordinary of British Armorial*s was published in 1874 and was the work of two men, John Woody Papworth (1820–70), who edited the first 696 pages, and Alfred William Morant (1828–81), who edited the remaining 429 pages from material left by Papworth.

The initial key to the structure of the present work is Papworth's Introduction to his Ordinary in which he states: 'The Plan of the Work is simply thus: the arms are blazoned (i.e. technically described) and are arranged in alphabetical order by the names of such of the respective charges as are the first mentioned in the blazon; so that the inquirer has but to blazon the coat, and the first charge that he names shows under what title in this Dictionary the coat is to be sought ... some of the charges, such as the ordinaries and others much in use, form heads so comprehensive, that several divisions and subdivisions became indispensable: there it will be seen that further alphabetical arrangements have been observed ... This part of the plan will be best learned by inspection.' As Papworth suggested, the best method of understanding the structure of his Ordinary is by inspecting it and this applies to the present Ordinary, which can be understood most easily by examination of the index of headings which immediately precedes the text of the Ordinary.

The achievement of Papworth as compared to other compilers of ordinaries was that he saw the necessity of exact order in the entries. He devised a mode of classification that could extend from the simplest to the most elaborate coats where each had one and only one correct position controlled by the blazon. As the blazon controls the structure there are cases where an ambiguous coat in Papworth occurs more than once blazoned differently.

Papworth's underlying principle is that once grouped under the first named charge the remaining charges in each blazon are to be considered in their degree of remoteness from the field or the centre of it. Those that are further from the centre of the shield are considered before those nearer the centre. In a section such as 'On a bend between', the bend as the first mentioned charge determines that the entry will appear under Bend. Beneath the heading 'On a bend between' the charges which the bend is between will be grouped together so that all coats of On a bend between two lions will be together being arranged in an alphabetical sequence of the charges on the bend. Papworth's principle is also the basis of this Ordinary, though here an exact position is controlled more by linear appearance than in Papworth's Ordinary, where the colour of the field and of the first charge determine position within a larger general group. Papworth gives a few references to sources where these are Rolls of Arms. Other nineteenth-century and earlier ordinaries give no sources. The present work is devised to lead the user to the original source and a source is given for every entry. Any work compiled out of a card index of over 100,000 cards written by many hands over fifty years may contain errors. By the quotation of the original source such an error should be discoverable by the user.

As already mentioned, Papworth placed an undue emphasis on colour rather than linear appearance. Papworth has between pages 296 and 304 seventeen columns of one eagle placing together all possible varieties, displayed and close, rising and volant, wings elevated and downward, single and double-headed, gorged and crowned, and even those which are surmounted by a bend, chevron or other charge over all. He divides them initially by tincture and all those on an Argent field where Argent is the first word in the blazon come first and are followed by those on an Azure field and so on through the alphabet. The index of headings of the present Ordinary shows that plain single eagles displayed on a plain field are followed by plain single eagles displayed on a patterned field such as Ermine and then single eagles displayed which are themselves patterned are grouped together irrespective of whether the field is patterned or plain. These are followed by single eagles displayed that are collared then those that are crowned after which come single two-headed eagles arranged in the same order as those with one head. After these come single eagles that are close, rising, rising collared, rising crowned and holding other charges.

When the cards were originally arranged a decision was taken to place lions before other beasts which then followed alphabetically and eagles before other birds which also follow alphabetically. All cases of one bird whether an eagle or something else precede two birds. Roses similarly precede other flowers and lion's and leopard's heads precede those of other beasts. Heads that are coupé at the neck and therefore shown with a clean cut immediately precede those that are erased at the neck and have a jagged edge but only within each blazon, so that where two coats are identical but for this they will be next to one another. A pierced mullet and voided lozenge (mascle) are similarly not treated as different charges from a plain mullet or lozenge, so that Sable on a Bend Argent three Lozenges Sable is followed by Sable on a Bend Argent three Mascles Sable. Mullets are defined as stars of five points with straight limbs. Those with six straight limbs are called mullets of six points and not separated from those of five points. Consequently, Argent on a Bend Sable three Mullets Or is followed by Argent on a Bend Sable three pierced Mullets Or where the mullets have circular holes in the centre and finally there is Argent on a Bend Sable three pierced Mullets of six points Or. If there were any coats of Argent on a Bend Sable three Mullets of six points Or they would precede the pierced mullets of six points Or. In some sources such as J. H. Stevenson's Scottish Heraldic Seals (1940) the word star is used. Unless otherwise stated this has been interpreted to mean a mullet of five points and not an estoile which is a star with wavy limbs which is listed separately. Horse brays or barnacles are grouped with hemp brays or brakes. Sprigs and branches are placed with trees as they have a closer linear appearance to them than to single leaves.

Birds which resemble one another are grouped together whilst retaining their separate name. For instance cranes, herons and storks are listed under Heron &c. Heathcocks and moorcocks appear under Cocks. In Volume I members of the crow family and similar birds such as rooks and ravens were listed under Chough. This has been replaced by Crow as the general term in the present volume. Most printed sources describe the birds in the arms of Corbet as ravens. No attempt has been made to change the cards where in many cases the compilers have called them crows and the dialect term corbie is also retained when used. It may be meant as an Anglicization of the French corbeau. The purpose of the Dictionary is to arrange the material logically and not to edit it to the extent of creating uniformity in such cases. Fish trap, weel and weer are all used to describe the same object. This illustrates the possible variety of blazon which has been retained. There is nevertheless some standardisation of words so millrind is used in preference to fer de moline, tower is used to define turrets on a castle which is used for the main structure. The terminology list which precedes the Index of Headings gives both abbreviations and the term used for classification of a charge. Hedgehog sic sub urchin means that the word hedgehog can be used, but in any group it will appear under the heading Urchin. Similarly parrot sic sub popinjay leads the user to Popinjay as a heading when looking for parrots. In neither case is there any indication that hedgehogs and urchins are beasts or that parrots and popinjays are birds. This is left to the common sense of the user who will soon discover that all beasts are together within each heading, as are other groups such as birds and flowers. In Volume I demi-lions were extracted to form a group before lions. The same pattern has been followed in this Volume where demi-lions precede lions and demi-dogs precede dogs, but there is no general category of demi-beasts. Beasts, birds or other charges facing to the sinister are placed immediately after the same coat with the charge facing to the dexter. Two lions passant to the sinister therefore follow two lions passant to the dexter of the same blazon. The one exception is where the two charges face one another such as two lions combatant for which there is a separate heading.

The position of the lion follows an alphabetical sequence with the exception that lions rampant as the most numerous are dealt with before the less frequent lions couchant, passant, salient and statant, which follow in that order. There is one other exception which is that lions guardant, that is with the head turned towards and looking out at the spectator, have been treated as a separate group whether rampant, passant or in some other position. Lions guardant follow lions statant and are subdivided into rampant guardant, passant guardant, and then salient, sejant and statant guardant. Lions regardant, that is with their heads turned to look back over their shoulder, follow lions guardant.

In each section untinged coats, of which there are a considerable number derived largely from collections of seals precede tinged ones derived from rolls of arms and other coloured sources. Unidentified beasts and birds follow lions and eagles at the head of any group of other beasts or birds.

The English system of cadency marks is thought to have been invented by John Writhe, Garter King of Arms, in about 1500. After 1500 a label in non Royal heraldry denotes an eldest son in the lifetime of his father. Before 1500 the label did not necessarily indicate this and there are many instances of arms differenced by a label. Three birds and a label follows three birds without a label so that all coats of three birds with a label are grouped together. In a more complicated section such as one bird & in chief, single eagles & in chief are followed by other single birds & in chief and then single birds & in chief & label would follow if there were any such coats, first the eagles then other birds. Other cadency marks such as crescents and mullets are dealt with according to their position on the shield. An eagle displayed charged with a crescent appears under eagle displayed patterned or charged and if the crescent is above the eagle it is listed under one bird (eagle) & in chief.

This volume covers all coats where a chevron is the principal charge. The arrangement follows the same system as with the eagles. Plain chevrons on a plain field are followed by plain chevrons on a patterned field and then there are patterned chevrons arranged according to the pattern on the chevron irrespective of whether the field is patterned or not. A further division is modified chevrons which follows next and is similarly subdivided. Engrailed, embattled and indented chevrons are examples of those that are modified. Where a chevron is between two charges in chief and something different in base it is indexed under the charges in chief in the section Chevron between except where the charges in chief are unidentified. The principle of arranging the arms by the charges with the greatest degree of remoteness from the centre of the shield can be seen in practice in a section such as 'On a chevron between ... & on chief'. The chevron as the first named charge determines that the coat is placed under Chevron and the charges on the chief as the furthest from the centre of the shield determine the order.

The blazon follows that used by Papworth and is 'full and exact', as required by Croft Lyons. There is a problem of meanings shifting. For example what in the fourteenth century would be called a fess indented might today be blazoned five fusils conjoined in fess. The compilers of the cards were instructed to use an unambiguous modern blazon applicable to the drawing of the Arms and the Ordinary must be used with this in mind, though occasionally compilers did not follow instructions. Where the term a Royal tressure is used it is assumed that a tressure flory counterflory is intended.

Surnames are reproduced exactly as they occur in the original source, even if scarcely intelligible or erroneous, as some errors led to later unwarranted use of arms. In this the Ordinary follows Papworth. Variant spellings of a name tend to be grouped together so that nothing should be lost by repetition of medieval errors, or different forms of the same name such as De Alta Ripa, Dealtry, Dawtrey and Hawtrey or Boys and Wood. The index of names is computer generated and covers all names given as the principal name. It does not pick up names in editorial comment. In cases where more than one name is given in the original entry repetition of an entry with the alternative name sometimes occurs so that both are indexed. Shield number 105 on Cooke's Ordinary where the name Sr de Worthe has been written in a sixteenth century hand over the original name Sr de Sy(geston) is an example and the repetition can be seen on page 144 of the Ordinary. Misleading entries are also occasionally repeated with different names. In Randle Holme's Book there is an entry of arms of John Garther which appears on page 252 of the Ordinary. This is a reference to John Smert, Garter King of Arms 1450-78 and the arms are in fact those of his father-in-law William Bruges the first Garter King of Arms 1415-50. As there are other adjacent references to Bruges there was no need to repeat this entry under Bruges although it illustrates the problem.

The Index of Headings and the text contain three sizes of heading. Three degrees of heading were imposed in the interests of simplicity, though there are occasions when a hierarchy of four or more would have been preferable. For instance the heading in Volume I Argent billetty 1 lion should be subordinate to Billetty 1 lion but both are of the same size. As far as the structure of individual entries is concerned the blazon is followed by the surname and then by Christian or other names and/or a place of residence. Next comes the source. Editorial comment follows in round brackets and square brackets are used for other material such as speculative attributions, identifications or tinctures. Many abbreviations are used and reference should be made to the list of them. In English heraldic blazon adjectives are postpositive. A red rampant lion is blazoned a lion rampant Gules. Blazons follow this form but the headings do not necessarily. 'Patterned field plain chevron' is preferred to 'Field patterned chevron plain'.

Many people have worked on the Ordinary, though none for as long as Sir Anthony Wagner who was a member of the Croft Lyons Committee of the Society of Antiquaries from 1937 till his death in 1995 and General Editor of the Dictionary of British Arms from 1940 till 1995. His influence is as important on the structure as in other areas and for those who wish to study the structure in greater detail reference should be made to his articles in Antiquaries Journal 21 (1941), 299-322 and 23 (1943), 42-7 and to a progress report written for contributors dated 26 February 1948. These show the development of the structure, though some modifications have been made since 1948. Like Papworth's Ordinary, it is best mastered by inspection and use.

Sources

Alphabetically by abbreviation

The list of sources includes only those referred to in this volume. At the end of each entry the initials of the person who compiled the index cards, where known, are given in brackets. Comprehensive records of the sources and compilers were not maintained and it has not always been possible to give full particulars. The editors would like to thank all those who have assisted in improving the list with details of the present whereabouts of sources. In particular they would like to thank Mrs Ann Payne, F.S.A., Manuscript Librarian, British Library; Bernard Nurse, F.S.A., Librarian, Society of Antiquaries; R.C.Yorke, Archivist, College of Arms; Henry Beckwith, Secretary of the Committee on Heraldry, New England Historic Genealogical Society; and John Goodall, F.S.A.

Where an abbreviation is marked with an asterisk * the source is listed in Sir Anthony Wagner's Catalogue of English Medieval Rolls of Arms published as Aspilogia I (1950) to which there are additions and corrections in Aspilogia II (1967). These give details of original Rolls of Arms and their various copies.

Manuscripts previously described as in the British Museum (BM) are now referred to as in the British Library (BL) in the list of sources. References such as BM Harl MSS have however been retained in the text of the Ordinary and not changed to BL Harl MSS.

Terminology

Abbreviations and selected word list

The list of abbreviations includes abbreviations with the words in full and vice versa. The full version has been omitted if its inclusion would have placed it next to its abbreviation. The alphabetization of the list ignores apostrophes, hyphens, numerals and spaces.

'Sic' indicates that the word is used in the form given.

'Sic sub' indicates that the word may be used in this form but in a section headed by the alternative word.

'Say' indicates that the alternative word is used in preference, particularly in headings, but that the use of the second word is not necessarily precluded.

The spelling of French past participles has been anglicized, e.g. 'semy' rather than 'seme'.
