

Site Report 32a: Bluegrass: If You Build It, They Will Come Written 3 July 2018

The blurb on reddit began:

Are you tired of being shot down by pirates? Space stations looking a little sterile? Need a little “me time”? Do you yearn for simple pleasures like grilled seafood, an Earth style “sit down toilet”, and stunning ocean views? How about a shower that actually involves water and no space suction pipes?

Player SilfenPaths created the Serenity Villa resort on a paradise planet in the hub, The Bluegrass Planet, so named because of its long-blade blue grass covering countless lush islands. The post contained directions on how to get there, and instructions on how to leave messages in the “guest book”, a cliff wall nearby. It even included a dig site, which was one of the first to feature human-made structures intentionally placed underground. The resort was built, the invitation sent, and over 40 players made the quick journey from the Hub's capital of Lennon to take in the sea air, enjoy a diplo (dinosaur) steak, and leave a message.

The base is now gone, possibly wiped out by the version 1.3 update or by the construction of another base within the Bluegrass system at a later date. What remains is a legacy of human occupation and abandonment in a world now plunged in extreme cold. One communication station included an invitation to visit that player's homeworld, which is the subject of another future post.

Communication Stations

I observed 0 on May 30, 2018. Syn1334 recorded, "Cluster of comms surrounding empty base module, including "Serenity Villa may have been moved by 1.3" message from base architect." I did not see the base unit or any indication of comm stations during my visit (PS4, Normal).

NOTE: Online services were NOT showing as active.

On July 1, I returned to see what remained after touring the newer base at The Bluegrass Moon. The planet has a few scattered locations of communication stations, including one main cluster. I started with a grouping of two outliers (nos. 1–2) near a habitable base (Halute Base), which hinted at the absence of a player base. No. 3 is an outlier in the middle of nowhere with a planetary address and the invitation to visit (report forthcoming).

The cluster of 45 comm stations surrounds a now-vacant, generic habitable base unit (Oqoma-Ryus Colony) at the site of what used to be Serenity Villa. One comm station (no. 4) lies underwater nearby, with a vaguely threatening message of "sleep well" from the Void Empire. The bulk of the cluster is just west of the base either on the ground or atop the rim overlooking the base and the sea behind it. The placement of the comms was likely directed by the messaging left by Silfen.
