The implement was lying on the gravel upcast from the construction trench. The blade is 69.5mm long, and 26.3mm wide at its midpoint. It is of deeply ochreous flint, completely patinated, with shallow pressure flaking. The other edge has been damaged, but sufficient remains to indicate that it was probably in the form of a burin. The flint is held in Guildford Museum, with other finds from the BPA pipeline course in Surrey.

5003	Church Lammas, NW Staines	Lithic Working Site	Upper Palaeolithic	502700	172100	Flint Blades/Flakes/Other Flints	Hundreds	Yes	Yes	Unspecified	Unspecified	Unspecified	Development Led Archaeology	A watching brief on mineral extraction works was carried out by SCAU. In late 1994, flint blades of unusual length began to be found by the site observer. The growing collection of tools and debitage recovered was clearly Upper Palaeolithic and was in association with animal bones. English Heritage therefore funded excavation by SCAU. Ditches of two successive field systems and the southern arm of an early post-medieval rectilinear stock enclosure were revealed. The concentration of Upper Palaeolithic material previously disturbed proved to be the only such concentration present. A few Upper Palaeolithic-type flints and animal bone fragments were discovered to the north west of the main concentration, in association with a hollow which probably represents the remains of a watercourse; its fill was sampled for environmental evidence. Altogether 326 struck flints were recovered; at least twenty-four of the flakes, more than ten of the blades, and a few fragments of bone are burnt, which may indicate that, as well as being a flint-knapping and

A number of magnetic anomalies were detected, although no corresponding archaeological features were revealed, suggesting that full geophysical survey of the site would not be productive. Subsequent evaluation involving the excavation of 464 trenches by TVAS in advance of possible mineral extraction on this site revealed a wide range of finds and deposits. These comprised stray and residual finds of Upper Palaeolithic date, as well as Mesolithic, Neolithic and Bronze Age flintwork, and Prehistoric, Roman, Saxon and medieval pottery; and occupation evidence of Bronze Age, Iron Age, Saxon, medieval and Post-medieval date. The evaluation produced evidence of a field system of predominately Post-medieval date, as well as a number of ditches of uncertain and probably various dates. Three areas revealed features which contained material indicative of Prehistoric and Saxon dates. Further excavation of the phase 7 area revealed further non-structural Saxon features, as well as a discrete area containing a scatter of struck flints. The area contained nearly 400 pristine and unpatinated flints lying in-situ within the matrix of a river/clay deposit, and dating to the Late Upper Palaeolithic period. The area was carefully excavated, each flint being individually plotted and numbered and retrieved. The complete assemblage included examples of long blades, smaller blades, bladelets, and flakes, with some pieces retouched to provide backed points, scrapers and a burin, as well as miscellaneous debitage from working practices. Post-excavation analyses of the material is ongoing, but	SCAU
