Results:

To enable the addition of a passing place to an existing farm track a small parcel of land in cultivation was removed. This extended 2m to the north of the track and measured 32m from west to east. The topsoil, a dry and very stony mid greyish brown sandy silt, was removed to expose the natural geology beneath. This was a mid orange/brown dry sand with frequent small and medium angular, sub-angular and rounded stones. The topsoil was between 0.3m and 0.4m thick. No archaeological features were revealed and no artefacts recovered.
