EDITORIAL

As the perceptive reader will have realised by now, we are publishing both parts of Northern Archaeology together under one cover. This is simply the result of the lateness of publication, and next year's format will revert to the bi-annual system. It is still felt that this bi-annual format holds many advantages, most notably the rapid dissemination of current research, and we would like to encourage potential contributors who would like to take advantage of this situation to submit their material for consideration. It should be added, if stimulation is needed, that publication grants are not necessary, although of course, gratefully received, if available.
