

RECORDS OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE

Volume 29 1987

History in hedges (see p. 133). Typical Chiltern landscape, showing an area of former common field. Its far edge (middle distance) is marked by an overgrown 'bluebell hedge'; beyond it was woodland until c. 600 years ago. Right background: 700 to 900-year-old hedges mark a corner of another common field. (Photo: Pauline Cauvain)

Cover picture: the photograph was taken from beside the Asheridge road at SU 932042, looking south-west towards Cartridge. The wooded appearance is due to overgrown hedges; there is actually only one small wood in the picture, and that a 'modern' plantation. The common fields referred to in the caption are Beech Field (foreground) and Nuffield (see p. 134).

CORRECTION

Wolverton: A Magnet for Migrants

An unhappy accident during the production of Volume 28 led to three lines of type being lost between proof-reading and page make-up. We apologize to the author, Mrs French, for the embarrassment this must have caused her.

An erratum slip is included with this volume. The text there replaces the second paragraph on page 141 of Volume 28.
