Oxenton Hill Camp I (or The Knolls), Oxenton. 32/973313

In 1932, Powell and students from Cheltenham College excavated a mound in this camp.⁽¹⁾ It consisted of loose stones mixed with soil and lumps of blue lias clay some of which had been burnt. The pottery, now in Cheltenham Museum, includes an A situlate jar with finger-nail marks on the shoulder and other A sherds, but a sherd of linear tooled ware and two stamped sherds were also found (see p.). Other sherds appear to have Cotswold B affinities. Oxenton is a bivallate contour hillfort which could have had more than one period of occupation, and it may have started as an A settlement.
