Site Type: Installation of a wind turbine on a monopole tower with associated cable groundworks on Land at Lundy View Farm, Hallworthy, Cornwall
Period: N/A	Form: pre-planning
Description: On the 1st of October 2012 South West Archaeology Limited monitored the excavation of a 5x5m, 1m deep footing for a wind turbine and a 0.45m wide cable trench on Land at Lundy View Farm, Hallworthy, Cornwall (SWARCH reference code HLV12) (see Figures 1 &amp; 2; Photos 1, 3, 6, 8). No features were revealed, although an area of concentrated compact shillet (Photo 7) in the weathered natural (101) did coincide with a previously identified geophysical anomaly (Figure 1) and the line of a banked field boundary removed in the 1970's. Site Stratigraphy: (see Figures 2-4; Photos 2, 5) 0.25-0.32m of Topsoil (100). Mid orange-brown, friable clay silt with occasional small angular shillet &amp; quartz stones. 2 fe objects, not recovered. 0.18-0.25m of Weathered Natural (101). Light yellow-orange firm clay with occasional small-medium angular shillet stones and very occasional large quartz stones. At a depth of c.0.50m+, Natural (103). Light yellow-grey compact shillet and clay. The groundworks only revealed a compacted band of shillet that coincided with a recorded geophysical anomaly. This may have been contiguous with a banked field boundary removed in the 1970's, which was spread and subsequently ploughed out. An fe fragment from a farm machine (a harvester of sorts) was recovered in this vicinity but not retained. Compaction and debris along the old boundary may account for the geophysical anomaly, however, as no ditch was cut along this boundary no clearly definable evidence of a feature survived below the plough soil except the patch of seemingly compacted natural.
