

Index to Hurst Parish Marriage Register, 1585—1607 and 1633—1812

- Gold, Francis, 1733.
 Goldsmith, Hugh, 1637.
 Good, Methewe, 1605; Andrew, 1633; Wm., 1638; Wm.,
 1656; Thos., 1665; Andrew, 1688; Jno., 1704.
 Goodall, Benjamin, 1778.
 Goodchild, Henry, 1598; Nathaniel, 1642; Stephen, 1642;
 Charles, 1667; Thos., 1689; Thos., 1710; Jno., 1719;
 Jno., 1720; Ric., 1725; Thos., 1734; Charles, 1743;
 Charles, 1747; James, 1779; Ric., 1788; Charles, 1790;
 James, 1796; Wm., 1799; Jno., 1800.
 Gooddinge, Nicholas, 1607.
 Goodwin, Benjamin, 1746.
 Goom, Wm., 1770.
 Gooswell, Raffe, 1599.
 Gorrway, Christopher, 1590.
 Gorway, Christofer, 1600.

Notes

‘The City.’

It does not appear that the attention of antiquaries has been drawn to the large number of spots, hamlets or single dwellings, called by the above title. What is its origin? Its Latin derivation leads to the supposition that the name either arose in Norman times, or is a relic of the Roman occupation. A record should be made of all spots still named ‘The City,’ and an attempt made to trace the history of each. Some are possibly modern and may be passed over, but from a collation of evidence much light could be thrown on local history. A road in this district bears many indications of being a Bronze Age track used by the Romans for their communications to the South from the ford of the Kenneth, and within a distance of five miles has two spots on it called 'The City.' The importance of the name is obvious.—P. WILLIAMS, The Malt House, West Woodhay, Newbury, Berks.

Field Archæology in Berkshire.

Will members of the Berkshire Archæological Society send me information of the discovery of 'flint implements,' 'bronze implements,' and those of the 'iron age.' Also any barrows, which they know of in their neighbourhood, not marked in the ordnance maps. Also discoveries of Roman remains, &c., so that all these can be recorded in our Journal. I should be glad to receive information regarding the existence of old roads. Several counties are recording their 'field archæology.' I am anxious to do the same for Berkshire, and trust the members of our Archæological Society will from time to time give me this information.—J. HAUTEVILLE-COPE, Finchampstead Place, Berks.